With commodity prices falling and the season tightening the gloss has somewhat come off agriculture.

This is where the Dohne really shines low production costs, low labour inputs, high fertility, doing ability, quality apparel wool, plain bodied, mules free, high growth rates and a quality prime lamb carcass.

Although the wool market has lagged behind other agricultural commodities in recent years, it has been consistent. The fineness, staple strength, staple length and quality of Dohne wool along with the premium for non-mulesed wool still makes the wool component a profitable return. Coupled with early turn-off of quality prime lambs and low labour input, the Dohne package remains the most profitable sheep enterprise.

This is evident in the results of Macquarie's performance in merino sire evaluations in some of the most challenging sheep country in Australia. The results below speak for themselves.
